Objectives

In an effort to engage the scientific communities, governments, and industries in promoting knowledge-based economy, our university, Padang Institute of Technology, proudly presents the 1st International Conference on Technology, Innovation, and Society (ICTIS). After successfully hosting the national conference with similar theme for several periods, we expand the event for broad participants and audiences from various disciplines and countries. Our main goal is to reflect the processes of knowledge and technology valorization in countries and what these mean for universities' research; decision and regulation from policy makers; and perception from the world of business. According to its name, the ICTIS aims to discuss and evaluate the three pillars of knowledge valorization consisting of technology, innovation, and society. First, universities and other research institutes are the major players that play a main role on producing (applied) research or technology in which in the discussion about technology penetration and its issues. Second, we seek to how innovations are being fostered, both by policy makers and by the initiatives created between universities and the industrial sectors. The last part, we expect to discuss how the society, including Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSME), Large and Multinational Enterprises, NGOs, and etc., perceive knowledge valorization. With its broader topics and participants, we look at the diversity in topics and we also expect the knowledge sharing among participants.
